

Istraživanja pokazuju da najveći broj korisnika kao prvi izvor za pretraživanje Google. Izlazeći u susret korisnicima, Google je razvio poseban servis Google Book Search (<http://books.google.com>) namenjen pronalaženju knjiga pretraživanjem punog teksta u njima. Neke od knjiga imaju slobodan pristup punom tekstu, a za neke je moguće videti samo delove teksta koji sadrže zadate pojmove prilikom pretraživanja, dok su kod drugih dostupni samo osnovni podaci o knjizi, ali za sve postoji informacija gde mogu da se kupe ili pozajme.

Pretraživanje je kao i na Google.com.

Korišćenjem Advanced Book Search može se tačnije definisati pretraživanje.

- Reči ili fraze - pretraživanje se vrši kroz ceo tekst knjige

- Naslov
- Autor
- Izdavač
- Datum izdavanja

What would it be like if you picked up a drum, or a rattle, or some other musical instrument and started to express yourself? At first it might be so frustrating, you might want to give up. But if you stuck with it, evicted your inner critic, and just explored whatever wanted to come out, what would happen then? In this book Holly Blue Hawkins will walk you through the process of finding a drum, taking care of it, calling a circle, setting an intention, and drumming together. She will also show you how to incorporate drumming into your spiritual practice. She offers you an invitation to explore rhythm in a free and spontaneous manner in order to discover -- or rediscover -- not only drumming, but also your own inner rhythms.

Heart Whispers: Or, A Peep Behind the Family Curtain, Interspersed with Sketches of a Tour...

By William Atson

LETTER I.

JACKSON, Miss., December 29, 1855.

DEAR MOLLY:—I do not intend to write you a letter to-night. Stage-travelling and letter-writing are not at all compatible. With the exception of a little rest at Columbus, I have been moving day and night. I started at 6 o'clock yesterday morning for this place, and have been toiling up hill and down, until I reached the cars, twelve and a half miles from here, this afternoon.

I would not write at all now, but I do not wish you to be in suspense. To-morrow night I shall be on the Magnolia, and then after resting, I can collect my wandering thoughts and centre them upon home, children, wife. It is not however for the want of thoughts about you all that I do not proceed. They throng in abundance about me. "Beauty," Anna, Alice, yourself—your images are all before me. They inspire me as I travel. They stimulate me to go forward. They make pleasing the moment of my return. Physical indisposition ing effect on us while others, particularly the high-frequency vibrations so much a part of our modern world, can cause anxiety and dis-ease. Before we are born, before we are even conceived, we dwell in a world of pulsations. We incubate mere inches from the thunderous presence of our mother's heart-beat, massaged by the surging tide of her blood, the expansion and contraction of her bodily functions, the rocking motion of her stride.

Close your eyes and listen. What do you hear? Perhaps it's a snappy tune you heard on the radio, the sound of your heart beating, or your feet crunching through snow—even the leaky faucet you only remember in the wee hours of the morning. Life is full of rhythm. The more you tune into it, the more it will come and find you.

There was a time when music belonged to everyone. Somehow the Industrial Age has forced us into such exaggerated specialization we now tend to think that, unless we are expert in something, we shouldn't do it at all. Our soul cries out for music, so we pop in a CD and listen to a recording of someone else making music for us.

But what would it be like if, instead, you picked up a drum, or a rattle, or some other musical instrument and started to express yourself? At first it might be very frustrating, so much so, that you want to give up and go back to that various
